Mildred Lathbury, one of those unmarried “excellent women” who tend to get involved in other people’s lives, lives in a slightly shabby corner of postwar London, where she works part time at the Society for the Care of Distressed Gentlewomen and attends the nearby high Anglo-Catholic church.

Barbara Mary Crampton Pym was an English novelist. In the 1950s she published a series of social comedies, of which the best known are Excellent Women and A Glass of Blessings. In 1977 her career was revived when the critic Lord David Cecil and the poet Philip Larkin both nominated her as the most under-rated writer of the century. Her novel Quartet in Autumn was nominated for the Booker Prize that year, and she was elected as a Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature.

One of the great comic novels and a beautifully judged satire of post-war Britain, Excellent Women's elegant prose and deliciously light tone remain as fresh today as they did nearly seventy years ago. A charming comedy of manners, social climbing and a frightfully English type of forbidden love, Pym's seminal novel is a true classic.

Excellent Women is one of Barbara Pym's best-known novels. And Barbara Pym is one of Britain's most beloved authors. Despite being discovered quite late, Barbara Pym, an author who managed to become immortal, is known as modern Jane Austen. Be that as it may, I liked Barbara Pym more than I like Jane Austen.

Excellent Women is probably the most famous of Barbara Pym's novels. The acclaim a few years ago for this early comic novel, which was hailed by Lord David Cecil as one of 'the finest examples of high comedy to have appeared in England during the past seventy-five years,' helped launch the rediscovery of the author's entire work.
